Home Witness - Photo	Witness - Video Reports Reports by WWW HR Brief Perpetrators of War Crime Contact Us
Main Menu	— Tigers begged me to broker surrender - Marie Colvin , Times UK
Home
Witness - Photo	IT was a desperate last phone call but it did not sound like a man who would be dead within hours. Balasingham Nadesan, political leader of the Tamil Tigers, had nowhere to turn, it seemed. "We are putting down our arms," he told me late last Sunday night by satellite phone from the tiny slip of
Witness - Video	jungle and beach on the northeast coast of Sri Lanka where the Tigers had been making their last stand. I could hear machinegun fire in the Reports	background as he continued coolly: "We are looking for a guarantee of security from the Obama administration and the British government. Is there a guarantee of security?"
	He was well aware that surrendering to the victorious Sri Lankan army would be the most dangerous moment in the 26-year civil war between the
Reports by WWW	Tigers and Sri Lanka's Sinhalese majority.
HR Brief	I had known Nadesan and Seevaratnam Puleedevan, the head of the Tigers' peace secretariat, since being smuggled into rebel territory eight years
Perpetrators of War Crime	ago.
Contact Us	At that time the Tigers controlled a third of the island; now these two men were trying to save the lives of the remaining 300 fighters and their families, many of them injured. Tens of thousands of Tamil civilians were trapped with them, hiding in hand-dug trenches, enduring near constant
Login Form	bombardment.
Login Forgot your password? Forgot your username? Create an account search Life in a War Zone
	Marie Colvin For several days I had been the intermediary between the Tiger leadership and the United Nations as the army pressed in on the last enclave at the end of a successful military campaign to defeat the rebellion. Nadesan had asked me to relay three points to the UN: they would lay down their arms, they wanted a guarantee of safety from the Americans or
Witness - Photo	British, and they wanted an assurance that the Sri Lankan government would agree to a political process that would guarantee the rights of the Tamil minority.
Galleries 	Through highly placed British and American officials I had established contact with the UN special envoy in Colombo, Vijay Nambiar, chief of staff to Ban Ki-moon, the secretary-general. I had passed on the Tigers' conditions for surrender, which he had said he would relay to the Sri Lankan government.
	The conflict seemed set for a peaceful outcome. Puleedevan, a jolly, bespectacled figure, found time to text me a smiling photo of himself in a bunker.
Camps Apr09	By last Sunday night, however, as the army pressed in, there were no more political demands from the Tigers and no more photos. Nadesan refused to use the word "surrender" when he called me, but that is what he intended to do. He wanted Nambiar to be present to guarantee the Tigers' safety.
📕 20th Apr 2009 📕 11th Apr 2009	Once more, the UN 24-hour control centre in New York patched me through to Nambiar in Colombo, where it was 5.30am on Monday. I woke him up.
I 10th Apr 2009	I told him the Tigers had laid down their arms. He said he had been assured by Mahinda Rajapaksa, the Sri Lankan president, that Nadesan and Puleedevan would be safe in surrendering. All they had to do was "hoist a white flag high", he said.
📕 30th Mar 2009 📕 29th Mar 2009 📕 27th Mar 2009	I asked Nambiar if he should not go north to witness the surrender. He said no, that would not be necessary: the president's assurances were enough.
27th Mar 2009	It was still late Sunday night in London. I tried to get through to Nadesan's satellite phone but failed, so I called a Tigers contact in South Africa to relay Nambiar's message: wave a white flag high.

I was woken at 5am by a phone call from another Tigers contact in southeast Asia. He had been unable to get through to Nadesan. "I think it's all over," he said. "I think they're all dead."

That evening, the Sri Lankan army displayed their bodies. What had gone wrong with the surrender? I would soon find out.

I discovered that on Sunday night Nadesan had also called Rohan Chandra Nehru, a Tamil MP in the Sri Lankan parliament, who immediately contacted Rajapaksa.

The MP recounted the events of the next hours: "The president himself told me he would give full security to Nadesan and his family. Nadesan said he had 300 people with him, some injured.

"I said to the president, 'I will go and take their surrender.'

relay Nambiar's message: wave a white flag high.

"Rajapaksa said, 'No, our army is very generous and very disciplined. There is no need for you to go to a warzone. You don't need to put your life at risk'."

Chandra Nehru said Basil, the president's brother, called him. "He said, 'They will be safe. They have to hoist a white flag.' And he gave me the route they should follow."

The MP got through to Nadesan at about 6.20am local time on Monday. The sound of gunfire was louder than ever.

"We are ready," Nadesan told him. "I'm going to walk out and hoist the white flag."

24th Mar 2009

川 20th Mar 2009

- 📕 17th Mar 2009

- 📕 16th Feb 2009 - 📕 11th Mar 2009

--- 📕 16th Mar 2009 --- 📕 10th Mar 2009

📲 09th Mar 2009

📲 07th Mar 2009

06th Mar 2009

🚛 01st Mar 2009

川 22nd Feb 2009

📕 21st Feb 2009

🕌 19th Feb 2009 📕 07th Feb 2009

---- 📕 24th Jan 2009

Tigers begged me to broker surrender - Marie Colvin, Times UK http://warwithoutwitness.com/index.php?option=com_content&view=a... WWW.tamilarangam.net

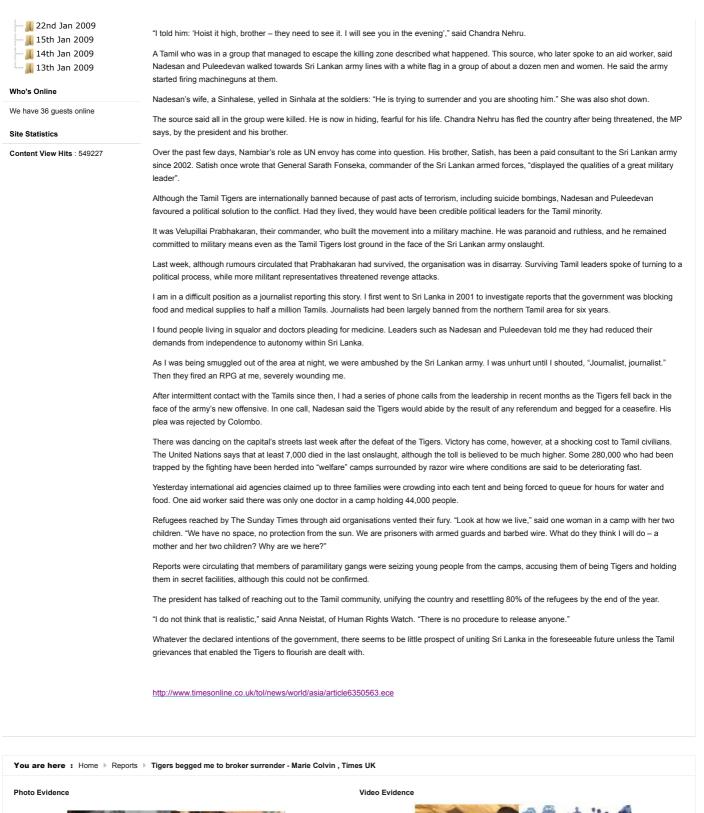

Photo Evidence Genocide/War Crimes committed by Government of Sri Lanka in 2009 1,000 Photographs

click here >>

Video Evidence Genocide/War Crimes committed by Government of Sri Lanka in 2009 100 Videos

click here >>

Copyright © 2011 War Without Witness in Sri Lanka. All Rights Reserved.